DESCRIPTION:

Wired Records presents:

An eclectic EP telling the untold story of no-sex-we're-british, jealous transvestites and cheap flights to dark places. Using her much-adored non-general midi yamaha keyboard, Miss le Bomb presents us with the rakehand dance, a new step to the beat. Miss le bomb has created a bum-wiggling selection of danceable mutant pop, messy disco and girl garage with absurd yet socially-conscious lyrics. This pop ain't for everyone, only the sexy people so all you fly mothers come on out there and dance the rakehand dance.

Miss le bomb is the psuedonym of the artist Catriona Shaw, misguided by music. Born in Scotland, she moved to Germany to study at the Munich Academy of Fine Arts and quickly became involved in the growing underground music and art circuit there.

She co-founded Club le Bomb, an 'illegal' Sunday club where happenings and concerts were staged and would become an outlet for outrageous and energetic 'underground' activities. At the same time she continued with other musical performance projects such as "Hektor and Rositha", the well-known pop covers project Queen of Japan and regularly collaborating with Electronicat. After moving to Berlin in 2003 she started to produce music as Miss le Bomb. The Miss le bomb experience is a direct descendent of the spontaneous and unpredictable occurrences that took place in club le bomb mixed with a teen-angsty girl's view of the world. A dancing/singing machine, she makes people feel hot and cold at the same time, questions conventions in music and performance and by the sheer power of her mind encourages the audience to become active players in the show. She has performed at a diverse number of venues throughout Europe, USA and China including high-profile art venues and ex-public toilets.
